BACKGROUND TO PV

AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIA

The energy produced by the sun has been used in two ways. The first of these is as a heat source, something which has been utilised throughout history. The second, and now most relevant is the use of the sun as an energy source (Photovoltaic).

Australia, despite its obvious abundance of sunlight, until now has lagged behind Germany in terms of electricity output by means of photovoltaic energy. Less than 2% of energy in Australia is produced from solar power something which has generally been attributed to the economic unfeasibility of photovoltaic as a power source in that country.

This inevitable disparity in the cost of fossil fuel kilowatts compared to renewable kilowatts has been offset in countries such as Spain and Germany by feed-in tariffs, designed to protect investors and help recover the initial expenses involved in photovoltaic technology.

Although a number of states have now introduced feed-in tariffs to attract investment, some have criticised them for not going far enough with the legislation. Despite certain legislative grey areas, there has been a remarkable change over the last ten years in public awareness of solar and indeed, the Australian government is acting. The proposed Victoria solar power plant will make it the worlds largest with a capacity of 154,000 kW and will harness concentrated solar energy.
